
Fundamental and clinical examination using non-radioactive xenon was investigated about pulmonary function.

Non-radioactive xenon was used as an inhalation contrast agent with digital radiography for imaging the airway and analyzing distribution of ventilation.

This technique is useful for direct detection of ventilation distribution and defects, it is necessary to improve the subtraction image for quantitative analysis.